ARCHAEOLOGY FIELD SCHOOL

University of Virginia Department of Anthropology

JAMESTOWN REDISCOVERY

05.28.2024 through 07.05.2024

LEARN ARCHAEOLOGY at the Jamestown Rediscovery excavations on Jamestown Island, the site of the first permanent English settlement in North America.

Jamestown Rediscovery and the University of Virginia are pleased to offer a field school at Historic Jamestowne — England's first successful colony in North America — from May 28 to July 5, 2024. Come and be a part of Rediscovery's ongoing mission to excavate, interpret, preserve, conserve, and research one of the most exciting archaeological sites in the United States!

Jamestown's Field School provides a unique opportunity for students of all backgrounds to contribute to the research and interpretation of early 17th-century America. Through hands-on fieldwork, students will learn archaeological excavation methods from the Jamestown Rediscovery team, who have excavated at the site for over 25 years.

INFORMATION AND APPLICATION:

Course topics include:

- Archaeological Excavation Methods
- Artifact Recovery, Identification, and Processing
- Feature Excavation and Analysis
- Archaeological Mapping
- Ground-Penetrating Radar

The course also includes field trips and weekly seminars exploring the contributions of historical archaeology to colonial history, and recent literature in the discipline. Both untrained and experienced students will learn practical archaeological skills, and the course is an excellent educational opportunity for teachers seeking recertification in the social studies content area. Whether you want to become a professional archaeologist or want to experience the thrill of discovery, Jamestown Rediscovery invites you to join us in studying America's Birthplace.
